Growers, researchers talk 2018 Farm Bill with Sen. David Perdue

By Amy Carter

TIFTON – U.S. Sen. David Perdue, R-Ga., hosted a second “listening session” with Georgia farmers, agribusiness leaders and university researchers April 27 to hear their expectations for the 2018 Farm Bill. Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary Black moderated the discussion, which was held at the University of Georgia Conference Center.

“It’s vitally important for our nation to have an intentional policy for food security, for food safety, for fair trade, for research, for school nutrition – that’s essential for the nation,” Black said. “When we have a discussion like this, the public often asks, ‘Well, why is there a Farm Bill?’ Well, all of those qualities are what we need in a policy for the nation to succeed.”

The Farm Bill is the primary legislation establishing national agricultural programs and food policy. It is reauthorized by Congress every five years or so.

Perdue heard from row crop farmers in December during a visit to Atlanta. In Tifton, he met with fruit, vegetable and nut growers, as well as researchers from the University of Georgia, Fort Valley State University and Georgia Tech.

“This is so important to me as a member of the Ag Committee in Washington that we get out and listen to this because you hear different things from different people and believe me, when you’re sitting in Washington, you don’t hear what comes from the real world,” Perdue said. “Agriculture is the number one industry in the state of Georgia. It’s our fastest growing industry, and quite frankly as a country, as we talked about in there, it’s our biggest export opportunity from a growth standpoint. If you want to grow the economy you’ve got to grow the ag industry.”

Specialty crops – which include olives, blueberries, sweet potatoes, sweet corn, turfgrass and Christmas trees – are key to that growth, Perdue said, and research funded by the Specialty Crop Block Grant Program endowed by the Farm Bill is fueling the rise of specialty crops in Georgia.

“Specialty crops are one of fastest growing areas of the agriculture industry,” Perdue said. “You’ve seen yields in corn and cotton and peanuts go up dramatically over the last 50 years. Well, specialty crops are just getting going. We’re doing olive oil, for goodness sake, in Georgia.”

State Rep. Jason Shaw, R-Lakeland, is an olive grower who spoke of the impact specialty crop block grants have had on the rise of the industry. A grant-funded study of olive oil quality that produced favorable results for locally made oil. Consequently, cultivation of the crop is increasing to meet demand, especially in Southwest Georgia, where 7,000 acres of newly cultivated or soon to be cultivated olives are raising the state’s yields.

The competitive grant program is administered by the state department of agriculture, which distributes about $1.4 million per year, Black said.

Other crops represented in the discussion were citrus, blueberries, pecans and Vidalia® Onions. The theme common to all was labor, which is a problem the Farm Bill cannot address. However, Gary McMurray, division chief for the Georgia Tech Research Institute, said the inclusion of engineering and technology schools in discussions like this one could produce solutions for farmers challenged by a shortage of willing hands to help harvest their crops.

“Labor is an interesting problem. We kind of stayed away from labor initially because every engineering and technical school worth their salt has done a harvesting robot and 99.9 percent of those have been unsuccessful because there’s so much sensing and speed in the task, especially in specialty

Georgia-grown beef gets another look

Cattlemen contribute to economic study of finishing cattle in state

By Amy Carter

amy.carter@agr.georgia.gov

The Georgia Cattlemen’s Association is pondering the establishment of producer-owned finishing and processing facilities to meet consumer demand for Georgia-grown beef. The association has joined with Georgia Farm Bureau, Georgia EMC, the Georgia Department of Agriculture, AgGeorgia Farm Credit, AgSouth Farm Credit and Southwest Georgia Farm Credit to fund a study by the University of Georgia’s Center for Economic Development and Agribusiness.

Georgia cattlemen typically ship cows to feedlots in Western states for finishing.

“We think that financially, the opportunity to maintain ownership of the downstream process may make sense for area cattlemen,” said Will Bentley, executive vice president of the Georgia Cattlemen’s Association in Macon. “Eliminating the cost of shipping cattle out of state, combined with giving farmers the opportunity to own a share of the finishing process, could benefit Georgia’s cattle industry.”

Finishing cattle is not a new concept for Georgia.

“There was a time in the past that we fed a good amount of cattle in Georgia and the Southeast,” Bentley said. “Similar to what has happened to the pork industry, a lot of the packing plants shut down through buy-outs and consolidations.”

That is how FPL Food in Augusta came to establish the largest feedlot in Georgia, creating what the company calls a “vertically integrated pasture-to-plate” experience. Châtel Farms near Reidsville was purchased by FPL owner François Léger in 2011 to serve as a vacation retreat for his family.

When FPL encountered challenges procuring cull cows for meat production, the family farm was pressed into service, and eventually Léger began feeding his herd silage bought from the state prison in Reidsville.

“I started to feed Holstein and I realized, ‘Well, it’s not doing bad,’” he said during an open house at Châtel Farms last spring.

The model he established has proven to cattlemen throughout the state that it can be done here. However, heat and humidity are the primary hurdles to finishing cattle in the Southeast.

Alexander Stelzleni, PhD, associate professor of Animal and Dairy Science in the UGA College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, is investigating the effects of heat on cattle in a separate study funded by the Georgia Agricultural Commodity Commission for Beef.

Georgie's Drive Thru Brunswick

Hello! I'm Georgie, the Georgia Grown mascot. I travel the state of Georgia promoting our No. 1 industry – agriculture! Believe it or not, fishermen are farmers, too. Their tractors look more like boats because their harvest comes from the sea, but crops like Wild Georgia Shrimp are every bit as sweet as the Vidalia® Onions grown on the mainland. Fried, boiled, hand-battered, broiled, creole, butterfly, etouffee, jambalaya, shrimp kebobs, gumbo, popcorn or jumbo – I love shrimp! Shrimping is a special industry on Georgia's coast that is celebrated annually with a very special event. Every Mother's Day weekend, the priest from St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church joins the Knights of Columbus aboard the most famous shrimp boat in Brunswick, the Georgia Bulldog, and rides into the harbor for the Blessing of the Fleet. The shrimping fleet forms a line, all cleaned up and decorated to mark the beginning of the season, and parades past the Bulldog to receive a sprinkling of holy water and a prayer for a safe and bountiful shrimping season. This year, Brunswick will celebrate its 80th Blessing of the Fleet Festival on May 11 and 12 at Mary Ross Park on the Brunswick River. The Blessing will take place at 2 p.m. on Saturday in the harbor. A shrimp eating contest will follow! (I hear my Uncle Melvin is the early favorite to win.)

Georgia Farm Bureau is accepting proposals for ag research grants

MACON – As part of its Harvest 20 Vision, Georgia Farm Bureau is accepting proposals for agricultural research projects until May 18. GFB will award five grants ranging from $5,000 to $10,000 each. Grants will cover research conducted from June 1 through Dec. 31.

Proposed research topics should focus on agricultural issues such as: water quality/management; new/emerging insects, diseases or weeds; crop varieties; fertilizer efficiency/effectiveness; post-harvest management practices; livestock management (i.e. feed efficiency, pest management); marketing/risk management. Other ag research topics are welcome for consideration.

"The three components of the Harvest 20 Vision I announced at Georgia Farm Bureau's 2017 convention are inspire, educate and preserve," said GFB President Gerald Long. "Awarding these grants to support ag research that will benefit Georgia's farmers is part of our goal to inspire Georgia agriculture. The success of Georgia agriculture depends on research that addresses production issues our farmers currently face, such as whitefly control in crops, water-use efficiency or animal nutrition."

Proposals will be considered on their individual merits, potential success and funding availability. Proposals should be limited to three pages and include the following information: Project title and investigator(s) names; need for research in Georgia; potential benefit/impact of research; objectives; procedures and research location; budget (include request of funds for personnel services and operating costs).

Grant recipients will be invited to participate in the trade show at the 2018 GFB convention set for Dec. 2-3 at the Jekyll Island Convention Center. Researchers will be asked to present their findings in a poster display during the trade show. The expense of a one-night hotel stay and trip mileage will be paid to one project presenter. Grant recipients will be asked to formally submit their research findings to GFB by Dec. 31.

Georgia National Fairgrounds hosting SJRA youth rodeo in May

By Amy Carter
amy.carter@agr.georgia.gov

The Georgia National Fairgrounds and Agricenter in Perry will, for the first time, host the Southern Junior Rodeo Association’s Southern Finals May 25-27. The association was founded in 1994 to teach children ages 5 to 14 the fundamentals of rodeo. That effort was so successful that the organization added a high school division in 2013. High school participants compete for a position to represent SJRA at the International Youth Finals in Shawnee, Okla., in July.

The two-day competition in Perry will offer a full schedule of rodeo events, including barrel racing, goat-tying, pole-bending, steer wrestling and calf roping. Some 100 youth are expected to compete. Admission is free for spectators.

Philip Gentry, agriculture/youth director at the fairgrounds, said events like the youth rodeo add to the positive economic impact the fairgrounds make on Middle Georgia and the state.

“Agribusiness in the area has grown because of the busy schedule that the GNFA keeps, specifically in youth and agriculture events,” Gentry said. “Our hotel/motel industry remains strong because of the continued drive to keep the agricenter busy. The new dollars that are brought into our state have a huge impact on our business community because many of the events we host are national and regional events. There will be youth attendees from several Southern states for this Circuit Finals.”

Ann Jones, who sits on of the board of directors of the fairgrounds and also serves as an advisory member to the Georgia Agricultural Commodity Commission for Equine, said the livestock facilities in Perry are a natural choice for livestock events like the junior rodeo.

“They rate as good as if not better than the major facilities in the country, and by that I mean facilities in Fort Worth, Tulsa and Oklahoma City,” Jones said. “Perry provides a different atmosphere that tends to lend itself to families and you don’t worry about bringing your family and you don’t worry about your livestock.”

The SJRA event isn’t the only youth rodeo first for the Georgia National Fairgrounds – the site has been selected to host the junior finals for the National High School Rodeo Association in 2022 and 2023.

“This will be only the second time the junior finals have been East of the Mississippi, to my knowledge,” Jones said.

See a full schedule of upcoming events at the Georgia National Fairgrounds and Agricenter online at www.gnfa.com.

GDA’s Mansfield Equine Barn hosts veterinary tech students

The Georgia Department of Agriculture hosted its annual Equine Lab Day for students of the Athens Technical College Veterinarian Technician Program at the equine care facility in Mansfield on April 19.

According to GDA Farm Manager Jessie Murray, 11 veterinary tech students and three veterinarians attended this year’s event to partake in a series of hands-on learning opportunities. From administering routine vaccinations to observing a minor surgery, students were able to get out of the classroom and apply their knowledge in the field.

Students vaccinated equine, assisted with castration, and performed lameness and flexion exams and observed the horses’ body conditions. This year, students had an opportunity to observe a minor surgery performed by Dr. Rhonda Viet, who serves as the primary vet for the facility. The equine facility staff discussed the importance of the GDA and the equine facilities throughout the state and taught students how to catch, halter and handle equine.

Gov. Deal signs ag education act at Georgia FFA Convention New law establishes pilot program targeting K-5 students

By Kendall McWilliams

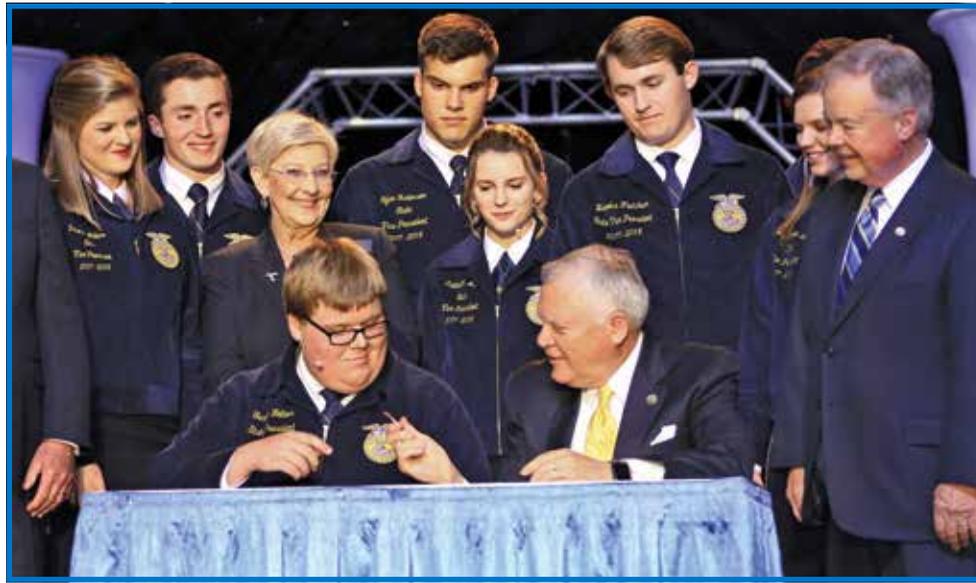

kendall.mcwilliams@agr.georgia.gov

Gov. Nathan Deal signed the Green Agricultural Education Act into law April 27 at the 90th Georgia FFA Convention in Macon.

An amendment to the existing Quality Basic Education Act, the Green Agricultural Education Act lays the framework by which Georgia's agricultural education programs in grades 6-12 should be built and executed. The act will also provide for pilot agricultural education programming in six primary schools across the state, a first step in considering the permanent implementation of agricultural curriculum in elementary schools statewide.

The first amended code section states that all agricultural education programming provided to Georgia's middle and high school students should maintain adherence to the nationally recognized three-component model. The curriculum is held to the following three standards: daily instruction in an organized classroom and lab environment; hands-on experiential learning opportunities through a supervised agriculture experience program; and leadership and learning opportunities through participation in the Georgia FFA Association, the National FFA Organization, and agricultural education.

To aid local systems in including all three components, the GDOE must serve as a source of accountability and will develop appropriate curriculum and standards by considering input from Georgia's agricultural educators. Under the act, the GDOE should also employ an adequate number of full-time employees who are certified in agricultural education and ensure that state and federal funding are appropriately distributed regionally so that programs deliver intended results.

Delaying the introduction of agricultural curriculum until grade 6 provides elementary school students with little exposure to agriculture-related topics in an organized classroom setting. The second amendment made by the Green Agricultural Education Act authorizes the department of education to establish a pilot program that will test the feasibility of agricultural education programming for students in grades K-5.

The department of education will carry out the pilot program in a minimum of six public elementary schools. The act requires that the GDOE implement the pilot program in one elementary school in each of the six regions of the state. The local school system and board of education of each selected pilot school must agree to provide funding in full for a testing period of no shorter than three years.

Just as it does for ag education in the higher grades, the GDOE will provide guidance and standards to structure a curriculum that is grade-appropriate and includes collaborative learning experience through investigation and inquiry, including laboratory and site-based learning activities and personal and leadership development opportunities.

The success of the pilot program will be evaluated upon the conclusion of the three-year test period. The results will be reported to the House Committee on Agriculture and Consumer Affairs, the Senate Agriculture Consumer Affairs Committee, and to the House Committee on Education and the Senate Education and Youth Committee.

MACON – The 2018-2019 Georgia State FFA Officer Team was elected by delegates from more than 300 FFA chapters at the 90th Georgia FFA Convention in Macon on April 28. The eight-member officer team will serve as advocates of agricultural education and the Georgia FFA Association throughout the next year.

"These young men and women have demonstrated significant leadership ability, intensive knowledge of agriculture and have a great passion for the development of FFA members," said Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary W. Black. "The industry is fortunate to have such champions for agricultural education throughout the state, working to develop the leadership and technical competency needed for the next generation. We look forward to working with them throughout their officer year."

Members of the 2018-2019 Georgia FFA State Officer Team are:

- Central Region VP-Brittany Braddy (Montgomery County)

- South Region VP-Emily Leonard (Echols County)

Georgia FFA

The Macon Centreplex hosted a record crowd of more than 6,000 people at this year's convention April 26-28. Seven general sessions were filled with award presentations, guest speakers, FFA talent and delegate business. The agenda also featured a career show, community service projects through the Rebuilding Macon organization and state-level Career Development Event and Agriscience Fair competitions.

U.S. Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue delivered the keynote address to the convention.

"Our convention is a wonderful opportunity to feature the success of so many students from across our state," said Ben Lastly, executive secretary of the Georgia FFA Association. "Agriculture is the No. 1 number one in the greatest commodity in our state. Bringing these young people together to celebrate their success in both leadership and agriculture is good for the future of our state."

crops," he said.

"You have to, A, find the fruit; B, you have to grade it – is it ready to pick or not; then C, you have to pick it without damaging it," McMurray said. "Those things are very easy for the human but it's incredibly hard to automate."

One solution is remote operation of harvesting robots, which takes the back-breaking work out of harvesting and makes it appealing to a broader set of people.

"One of our really weird ideas is an Uber-like service where someone comes on board – say a college student or a stay-at-home mother or a disabled veteran – and says, 'Hey, I can do this for four hours today' and they sign in and do that work for four hours and then someone else comes in and does that work," McMurray said.

It sounds like an easy solution, he said, but it's one that requires a great deal of cooperation between the land-grant scientists, extension services and the engineering and technical schools. It also requires a great deal of investment.

we can finish cattle in Georgia through most of the year with little issue. However, the hot and humid summer months become a problem as they create a heat stress situation on the cattle which causes their performance to decrease and become less efficient," Stelzleni said.

"One of the major objectives of our current project is to quantify the impact of heat stress in finishing cattle during the summer and start to identify proper mitigation strategies to ensure the cattle remain comfortable and continue to perform through the summer."

Léger's answer to the problem of heat stress was to construct barns with high roofs and open sides. Each barn is 64 ft. x 0.25 miles long and contains 12 pens measuring 64 ft. x 100 ft. The temperature inside the barns – even with the open sides – is about 20 degrees cooler than outside.

"The goal is to keep them very well in good shape and get the very best beef quality that we can get out of the animal," Léger said.

Cattle are raised in all 159 counties in Georgia and are the foundation of a $3 billion industry, according to the Georgia Cattlemen's Association. The association expects to release the results of its economic study in the fall.
